

High Street Neighborhood Center

HISTORY

The High Street Neighborhood Center is a joint ministry of Calvary Baptist Church and First United Methodist Church. It began in 1969 when a group of visionary women from both churches recognized a need in the community for a downtown day care center satisfying two critical needs:

- affordability for working parents; and,
- quality care within a Christian setting.

In the early days, many of the families that High Street Neighborhood Center served lived in a very low income neighborhood occupying what is now the parking area surrounding Rupp Arena, a vicinity historically known as “The Bottoms.” The center’s van picked up the children each morning. Staff made certain the students ate hot meals, wore clean clothes, gained access to medical care, and participated in activities preparing them for school. Fees were determined on a sliding scale based on family income. Calvary and First Church provided foundational monetary support, as did private contributions, monies from child care agencies, and the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Things have changed since 1969. Demographically, HSNC’s student population is different from what it was four decades ago. Children live in all areas of our city. They represent a diversity of race, religion, and culture. Financially, new and developing mechanisms of monetary support augment, expand, and “add to” the center’s original means of funding.

The mission and ministry of High Street Neighborhood Center, however, remain constant and unchanged -- caring for, and teaching, Lexington’s children in an environment of Christian love.

Thank you for your commitment to this shared purpose.
